QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Art is a marriage of the conscious and the unconscious." – Jean Cocteau

"The Art of a well-developed genius is far different from the Artfulness of the Understanding, of the merely reasoning mind. Shakespeare was no calculator, no learned thinker; he was a mighty, many-gifted soul, whose feelings and works, like products of Nature, bear the stamp of the same spirit; and in which the last and deepest of observers will still find new harmonies with the infinite structure of the Universe; concurrences with later ideas, affinities with the higher powers and senses of man. They are emblematic, have many meanings, are simple and inexhaustible, like products of Nature; and nothing more unsuitable could be said of them than that they are works of Art, in that narrow mechanical acceptance of the word." – Novalis

"I would rather live in a world where my life is surrounded by mystery than live in a world so small that my mind could comprehend it." – Harry Emerson Fosdick

"A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable, who believes that there is no virtue but on his own side, and that there are not men as honest as himself who may differ from him in political principles." – Joseph Addison

"People change and forget to tell each other." – Lillian Hellman
